GREENING YOUR IT

Thursday, June 25, 2009

7:00 – 9:00 pm

Green Building Institute @ The

EnviroCenter

7761 Waterloo Road (MD Route 175)

Jessup, MD 20794

Green IT has become an industry buzzword, but what does it mean? This class will explain the importance of greener IT policies. Solutions to a greener IT infrastructure will also be explained with coverage of virtualization as a green tool, procurement, disposal of computers and better desktop power management.

About the Presenter

Nate Solloway has been supporting the infrastructure needs of Community IT Innovators (CITI) clients since 1998. Some of his younger colleagues may think of him as "old school," however he is actually one of CITI's pioneers in investigating technical innovations. He has championed the benefits of "hosted Exchange" for smaller clients and enjoys promoting Open Source alternatives to Microsoft software. Nate has also authored a series of blog posts on Virtualization that have also been published on the Tech Soup blog, and has recently been a leading innovator in researching and refining CITI's green IT services.

Nate is a Microsoft Certified System Engineer and has a B.A. from Austin College. To relax, Nate spends his weekends teaching skydiving, or as he likes to think of it, "teaching people the importance of planning and redundancy".
